

The Dogma of Salvation through Blood

The New Testament in your Bible comes somewhat closer to the truth. But here there are also many misleading dogmas which have been added. First and foremost, not everything that Christ is alleged to have said is true. There are many exaggerations and that which Jesus Christ really said is construed differently today. By no means does this concern the PRIMORDIAL spirit, i.e. it does not concern God personally. Your Christ also never claimed that. Now the theology of Christians is committing an atrocity. This involves the so-called "Salvation through the Blood of Christ". Biblical records maintain that the Messiah had to die a death willed and approved by God so that mankind would be redeemed from its many sins. We Santiner are appalled at the plethora of such ignorance.

First of all, the course of a human destiny is never so exactly presaged that death is already predetermined.

Secondly, is God for life and not against the same? The death of Jesus is a crime and it is an effrontery of theology to arrange it so that God tolerated this crime, indeed, furthermore desired it! This impertinence is inexcusable, because God is not a criminal, also not out of love! Since the case of Jesus Christ involved an emissary of divine supervision, the theologians invoked the assumed omnipotence of God. Yet it was a great fallacy, because God did not fetch the dying Son of God from the ordeal of crucifixion. On the contrary, he allowed him to die cruelly amidst the mockery of all accomplices. But an explanation had to be found for this purpose. According to human ignorance, it is: the Almighty God allowed Jesus to die so that mankind is redeemed of their sins. An innocent scapegoat for all of mankind, which is now rid of any responsibility and any administration of justice! I say to you with my whole power of urgency: "This is a dangerous fallacy that you will all have to bitterly regret if you make proper use of your logic!"

Compassion and forgiveness

There is no salvation through blood! However, Christ showed you a path of salvation. There is no other way. Human beings can only make their path in better levels of existence through better thinking and better action, only through an upbringing towards better human beings. A teacher, not even a teacher of God, cannot redeem a single human being with their death, even if this death is so cruel. This is human nonsense. Incidentally, this mass salvation of earthly mankind is actually meant for the great Creator. From him one demands, without asking him, the generosity and insane love for malevolent human beings. He shall redeem mankind from all evil, or as the case may be, allow all of mankind into Heaven unpunished. This shall merely require contrition before a priest, irrespective whether the contrition is genuine or merely feigned. The main thing is that the person seeking forgiveness confesses their misdeeds to the priest. How feeble-minded you think in these points! Make use of your logic once! Such a God who would favour in this frivolous manner a person who committed the great mistake would be an idiot...

Philosophies are dangerous intellectual games

This development on this star has made tremendous progress in the past 50 years. But this enormous progress led to the fallacy that such progress is now also due to human knowledge. This is unfortunately not the case. Man probably has better knowledge in many areas of natural sciences and technology. But higher knowledge is excluded from this. On the contrary, one has completely neglected the most important area, so that hardly a fallacy in this direction has been eliminated. For an extraterrestrial person it is incomprehensible in which mental derangement these earthly human beings live. Unfortunately, I must formulate it in these harsh words:

Earthly mankind is an eyesore throughout the universe. I will wholeheartedly endeavour to show the faults and to correct them accordingly. But I also know how difficult it will be for you to establish the eternal truth in place of the eternalised fallacy. There are human beings who reflect about this or make serious considerations. What they have found out in this process you call philosophy. If you like it you index these notions in your science, which is then elevated and taught as an important store of knowledge. Yet these notions are earthly and not proven through anything. They lead you astray and steer the spirit of human beings in completely spurious paths. Therefore I warn you: stay away from philosophy. It is a dangerous intellectual game that does not correspond to the facts!

God's organisation

God himself does not have any authority over what happens on Earth and is left to human beings. These are harsh words. They strike theology like a slap in the face. Yet where is there a case of experience that would be different?

God has quite different tasks than these. The divine wonder is also not made by God, but by divine organisation. Insofar as this pertains to the overall human destiny, this supervision does not belong to the task of the primordial spirit, but in the province of a subordinate organisation. You were sent teachers who possessed the ability to make themselves understood with the appropriate spiritual sphere.

Therefore earthly mankind does not live entirely in ignorance. If this mankind, which is merely one among thousands, does not listen to these positive teachers, this is due to the poor volition of human beings...

From the omnipotence of God

In some cases there is something written about a meeting of prophets with 'God'. This is also a fallacy, because they never spoke with the primordial spirit. Either a medium speaks with the entities of the spiritual dimension or a medium has contact with us Santiner. Moses spoke with Santiner. He spoke with the leader of a large "outer space beamship". He was taught for weeks and was a guest in the spaceship that he took for God's dwelling. But what are reported in the Books of Moses are by no means the instructions which he received from the Santiner.

The truth was destroyed by priests and the gaps replaced by priestly thinking... At that time, Moses believed that he was a guest with God, because with his humble technical experiences he was not able to comprehend such a spaceship...

The sequence of creation

There has never been any "nothingness". But there was once an immaterial state. For eons a powerful intelligence which has constantly evolved from one state has lived in the centre of space. It is the eternal Spirit of God. He created a spiritual realm and populated this with his children, which he developed and which he gave life. As it turned out that the spiritual entity abused its own creative power, matter was created over an incomprehensible long period. It came into being as an energy core of unimaginable dimensions. As God deemed it was right, this core burst asunder in a huge explosion and disseminated the liquid, fiery matter throughout the universe. The basic configuration of the universe came into being. The receptive particles, the atoms, were made receptive to commands through the pervasive Spirit of God. Every cell is receptive to commands and is compelled to do what has been commanded. Entire series of cells can be joined together, and they all know what task they have to fulfil, although they do not possess their own consciousness. They act intuitively. The spiritual world, which in the meantime had grown into an inconceivable magnitude, worked on plans to arrange the resulting matter in accordance with the role model of the spiritual realm. In order to be able to continue to configure the existing matter, the spirit of the divine human being required a body that also belongs to matter. This point in time was the consummation of nerve protein cells and the human brain. The biblical depiction of Adam and Eve is a human fantasy which does not correspond to the facts. Mankind was not brought into being on the Earth; it experienced its initial incarnation on another star. The entire incarnations of human beings and animals on this star Earth took place at one time, since enough material was available – which is now almost completely depleted – for such basic materialisations.

The goal of creation

Mankind is immortal. Every human being is immortal. Only matter is ephemeral in its forms. It is part of the development of every human being that they at times have to go through a developmental process in the matter. The depiction of the tree of life, the apple and the snake is human fantasy within the scope of a symbolic philosophy. This depiction stems from priests who sought an explanation. It has no more value than your remaining negative philosophy.

God has disseminated his tasks. This dissemination is completely finalised. The now active, responsible organisation of God encompasses four billion outstandingly talented and experienced spiritual geniuses with high creative power and might. God himself is not a judge. His laws are so perfected and wise that the entire sequence in the spiritual realm and in the realm of matter takes place meaningfully, as long as man does not maliciously run against it. Any offence punishes itself. Any good deed rewards itself. Only the point in time cannot be determined. The vast number of human beings are destined to coalesce and to aid one another. This all pursues the goal of serving the divine plan accordingly and completing the plan of creation. Every single human being is important. No human being can determine how important they are in God's plan.

Life on Earth as a school

Life in matter is to a certain extent a state of exception that serves for strengthening. Life in matter is a school. The truly real and large life takes place in the spiritual dimension which no human being can circumvent. With the references from the material life the human being returns to their natural state, which gives them unforeseen greater possibilities in all domains. There is no resurrection of decayed flesh and there will also never be, because it is not possible according to the laws of God. A reincarnation in flesh is possible and takes place according to predetermined laws. The existence of the spiritual realm is not barred to you. There are points of contact in all parts of the Earth. All of Asia, the South Seas, Australia, Africa, South America, North America and all European countries, indeed the entire world has million-fold daily contact with the supernatural, which is unbelievably misrepresented by purported scientists as hallucination and pathological illusion.

The overall function of the brain

...But the world of matter hypnotises you so much that you are not able to look beyond the horizon of matter.

The human being has a larger mass of brain than he/she requires for thinking and regulation. A part of the brain that the present-day human being possesses has been meanwhile disused after epochs. It has discontinued its corresponding functions, since the technique has taken these functions away. This initially sounds somewhat incomprehensible, because despite an unprecedented technique we have retained these special functions of the overall brain. Yet this is the significant difference between earthly and extraterrestrial human beings.

Members of indigenous peoples have not yet entirely discontinued the functions of the overall brain. Indigenous peoples such as those in New Guinea utilise the aforementioned part of the brain for extrasensory functions. They communicate telepathically, yes even with the departed spirits of relatives and friends. And they also perceive their otherworldly enemies. They have a supernatural sense that the civilised human being no longer has at their disposal because it has become stunted over the course of time.

Erroneous conclusions with regard to a phenomenon

The civilised human being rests in technical and civilisational cultural security. They have discontinued these brain functions. It is no wonder that the indigenous people see spirits everywhere, speak with them and live together with them to a certain extent. Yet except for extremely rare exceptions, the civilised cultural human being cannot do that, since this special part of the brain is no longer at their disposal. Therefore they cannot comprehend this phenomenon for lack of self-awareness and scoff at this. They reject an extremely important fact as pure imagination and regard the entire behaviour of indigenous peoples as a type of special theatrical performance without realistic background... A disused part of your brain encumbers the necessary insight into a mystery of stupendous magnitude. This is a truly great fallacy. But what do your scientists think about these apparitions, which one has to describe as a genuine natural occurrence?

You are of the opinion that if the life of indigenous peoples is so primitive, their thinking also must be accordingly primitive. Therefore the apparitions are merely a form of imagination on a very primitive basis. Here lies the mistake that in its further consequence has led to a completely erroneous orientation in all spiritual realms...

Death as an instrument of power on Earth

Now the world possesses a tremendously extensive inventory of atomic bombs. These lethal devices call into question any meaning of freedom. Even more, they force human beings to defer to death. Death is the veritable ruler on this star. Its menace is also a dictatorship, no matter in which nation human beings live. It is not God who signifies life and allows your existence, but death is the sole dominator of your earthly existence. And you have given it this power. You must vegetate in its menacing shadow. You have brought it so far because you regard the primitive belief in spirits as sheer lunacy, because you designate everything wonderful and everything supernatural as superstition, and because you regard ecclesiastical beliefs as a blind, benevolent trust in something purportedly beyond proof. In the final analysis, you do not believe in the immediate further existence after death. Death is a dictator of unsurpassable magnitude. The human being is not afraid of God or his divine tribunal. They do not even fear the earthly laws as much as they fear death — no matter whether their opinions on this or that philosophy of life say yes. Death breathes down their neck, and the greater this menace is, the more they defer to all constraints, only to keep death at bay as good as possible. The fear of death is a fact with which the powers that be have already calculated and belaboured at all times. Death is the greatest deterrent with which one would like to compel governments and peoples to subordinate or completely submit.

The liberating mystery

In contrast, God's method for adapting peoples is different! His power primarily takes effect in another, but more powerful dimension, of which earthly mankind hardly knows anything. If God merely had the believers on this Earth at his disposal, he would be the loser. Intellectuals also say this, and for this reason they think it is more likely that he does not exist at all.

But they have no idea that his actual realm is no longer of this Earth, as Christ, your divine teacher, said it clearly enough to you. If human beings were to overcome the feat of death, any such menace would lose its effect... Every creature avoids mortal danger. But the human being on this Earth understands death as something that in no way corresponds to the facts. The indoctrination in this respect is more than deficient. Hardly a person on Earth knows about the mystery of death, not even your priests...

...Good Friday is the day in the year on which Christians transform Christianity in its distorted picture, year after year. In the prologue of the Gospel according to John, Jesus is called "the WORD that is with God" (John 1:1). But human beings did not listen to this Word. They are primarily concerned with elevating their own deeds to the will of God instead of the divine Word, and have figured out how to glorify murder and to make the best — truly the very best — out of it: the Salvation of Mankind, whatever that is! Not the Word of Jesus, but the theology of the cross became the centre of Christianity. The crucifixion became the incident through which Jesus is of interest. Not what he said, but what one did to him is important to Christians. Christianity has composed an 'executioner's theology' with its religion of human sacrifice, in place of the Word of Jesus, and goes as far as such a blasphemous 'murderer's assertion' as this: God intends to redeem human beings through crucifixion. He intends to save us through the blood of His Son.

It is true. Jesus was killed. But not by his Father, who had sent his Son sacrificed him to death. Neither is God conciliated through this death, nor are we redeemed by him. Jesus was killed by human beings. A human being, who declares solidarity with all the poor and expellees – in this sense Good Friday signifies the commemoration of a sympathiser with everyone – stands for many on the side of the enemy, and thereby brings his life in danger, in the world of murderers in which we live.

But what are you actually redeemed from? Redeemed from further murders? At least that would be something! But who is redeemed through murders from murders? And yes, the murders go on, for God, with God, in the name of God. Neither does murder redeem, nor does the suffering of a human being make the other human beings better. No salvation comes about through killing. Anything that costs blood is not worth any blood.

...This interpretation of the death of Jesus as an expiatory sacrifice reveals the personal innocence of Jesus. According to this, he did not die as a criminal for his own sins, but this Christian interpretation – that he died for extraneous sins – creates new problems. Because after all, it is not as if the wrath of God has fallen on us instead of on Jesus. Therefore he would have died in place of our sins, as we are always told. Jesus did not die at all for, but entirely through the sins of human beings.

In the effort to give a meaning to the death of Jesus, one can only engender nonsense, because one intends to justify a killing which cannot be justified, because no killing is and will ever be justified at all. The reference to God and the will of God cannot particularly deter human crime.
